As part of the government’s response to COVID-19, the Ministry of Justice in collaboration with other government Justice Sector agencies would like to find out how people are getting on at this time with a short 10 minute survey.

You might have come to this website because you have been invited to take part in the COVID-19 Justice Sector Survey and want to find out more about it.

The COVID-19 Justice Sector Survey collects information about how New Zealanders are getting on, and how they are being impacted by COVID-19. The Ministry of Justice will use results from the survey to understand what support and information New Zealanders need around COVID-19.

About the interview

The survey is of people who have taken part in the New Zealand Crime and Victims Survey (NZCVS), and agreed to be contacted about future research.

The interview will include questions about social connection during the COVID-19 Pandemic time, feelings of safety, and suggestions about what the Criminal Justice System can do better.

The phone interview takes about 10 minutes. The interview will be carried out by trained interviewers from a company called CBG Public Sector Surveying. CBG Public Sector Surveying is a New Zealand company experienced in carrying out surveys.

Your privacy

The information given to the interviewer is protected by the Privacy Act 1993 and won’t be discussed with anyone. No one else will know who has taken part in the survey. The answers given are added to other people’s answers to create grouped results, so an individual’s information cannot be traced. Your information will always remain confidential.
